THE COMMISSION REPORT ON THE GREAT WATERWAYS

Out of a year of turmoil and strife has come the verdict.

The Waterways report is before the people.

The investigation has been complete, the examination of the evidence by the justices has been as thorough as it was at all possible for it to be. The findings are without equivocation. The verdict is that the government was not guilty of any wrong doing in connection with the Waterways deal.

The verdict clears forever the integrity of the ministers whose characters were assailed. It proclaims the fact that the motives of the men who made the deal with the Waterways company were not motives of personal greed or private gain. It demonstrates that there was no collusion between the ministers of the crown as the party of the first part and the railway promoters as the party of the second part to loot the province. It shows that the only man who received a dollar of money from the company. James K. Cornwall, received the money for value received by the company and that he did not, before, after, or at any time, undertake to conceal the fact that he had made an ordinary bargain at a stated price, fixed on a valuation, for the sale of his boats to the railway company for legitimate transportation purposes.

This, in brief, is the finding of the commission.

The report of Justices Harvey and Scott is nothing if not critical. It goes into every point brought out in the legislative debate of the last session. It takes up everything on which there was question. It deals in plain words with the allegation that there was a commission on the sale of the bonds to be divided up among interested parties, and it shows, what has never been shown before that if there was a surplus from the sale of the bonds that surplus belonged legally to the company and could not at any time or in any manner have been claimed in whole or in part by any party in the legislature.

It throws out as immaterial the question of whether or not Mr. Cushing was present when the final agreement was made, and after all that point is immaterial when it is taken into consideration that the control of the railway affairs of the province had been passed to the premier, with the obvious and generally understood intention of creating a department to deal solely with railway matters.

It deals with Mr. Cornwall's connection with the deal and shows that up to the time he became a member of the legislature he was a plain promoter, floating a syndicate by which he hoped to get a road into the north country in which he had such great faith; that after he became a member of the legislature he was simply a worker for the development of the same country and that the very fact that he did not at any time attempt to hide the fact that he had turned the control of his transportation line over to the railway was in itself prima facie evidence that he had nothing to hide, that there was nothing secret, no suggestion of collusion or underhand work.

There is another point which the justices touch on but the true significance of which their position as justices probably precluded them bringing out. It is mentioned in the report that when the first company came to the government asking support for a road into the north the government turned a deaf ear. A great deal was made of the fact, during the controversy, that the original proposition made was on a basis more favorable to the province than the one which was finally accepted. Without undertaking in any way to forego into a defence of the Waterways deal or the basis of the deal, it is only fair to point out that the first deal, with which it is compared never got past the primary stages—never definitely fixed for a reason which is well known in Edmonton. Namely, that at the time the first promoters came to the legislature the government did not want to make a deal with anyone. The Alberta government was at that time strenuously endeavoring to get the Dominion government to undertake to arrange the construction of the branch and colonization lines, arguing that as the Dominion had retained the land and resources the Dominion should furnish the guarantee. Those who remember Mr. Cross's famous speech in the Windsor hall the night after the election will understand the significance of it now in connection with this point and will understand that until the government had exhausted every effort to get the Dominion to undertake the work it would have been foolish for them to have gone into even the negotiations of a deal for a road to the north country or anywhere else.

The closing paragraph of the findings of Justices Harvey and Scott is really the crux of the whole report and the answer to the great question of the Waterways, even looked at from the most critical point of view. The paragraph is worth remembering. It says:

"As there is room for doubt that the inference of personal interest is the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the circumstances related, and in view of the positive denial, it can only be said that, in the opinion of your commissioners, the evidence does not warrant the finding that there was or is any such personal interest on the part of Dr. Rutherford or Mr. Cross, as is suggested by the words of the resolution of the Assembly."

In his summary of the evidence, Justice Beck gives considerable attention to the question of whether or not Mr. Cushing was actually aware of the negotiations, which appears to him to have been of some importance, and he shows pretty clearly that it is scarcely possible that Mr. Cushing could have failed to be at the Calgary fair-week meeting which he says he did not attend.

Judge Beck, however, puts his finger on the point where he says:

Then Mr. Rutherford and Mr. Cross are criticized for agreeing to a guarantee of $20,000.00 a mile without having obtained independent expert information as to the probable cost. Perhaps they have left themselves open to criticism on this point. We are not, however, considering their wisdom in neglecting to secure such information, but their motives; and it is therefore of importance to understand what information they had, and how they viewed the question.

Now that the Waterways deal as originally enacted is liable to radical revision, the great and important question for the province of Alberta at the present time is not whether the deal was a good deal, but whether the men who made the deal were dishonest.

The final clause of Judge Beck's report is the answer to this, and it should set at rest forever this question. It reads:

"In the result my finding is: (1) that Mr. Cornwall had, prior to the 20th of July, 1908, or thereabouts, an interest in the Athabasca Railway Company, which was on that date or thereabouts acquired by Mr. Clarke; (2) that with the above exception with respect to Mr. Cornwall, neither Mr. Rutherford, Mr. Cross nor Mr. Cornwall were at any time up to the date of this inquiry interested, either directly or indirectly, by himself or through others, in the erection, incorporation or organization of the Alberta & Great Waterways Railway Company, or in the making or entering into or carrying out a certain contract between the Government of the Province and the Alberta & Great Waterways Company, or the guaranteeing by the Province of the securities of the said company, or the sale thereof, or in the proceeds of or the amount realized from the disposition or the sale of the said securities, or otherwise however in connection with the said Company."

NIGHT.

Night comes, and stars their wonted vigil keep
In soft unfeeling depths of sky;
In mystic veil of shadowy darkness lie
The infinite expanses of the deep,—
Save where the silvery paths of moonlight sleep,
And rise and sink for ever dreamily
With the majestic heaving of the sea.
Night comes, and tenfold gloom where, dark and deep,
Into black waters of a land-locked bay
The cliffs descend; there never tempest raves
To break the awful slumber; far below
Glimmer the foamy fringes white as snow;
And sounds of strangled thunder rise away,
And midnight moanings of imprisoned waves.

DITTO IN ALBERTA.

(From the B. C. Saturday Sunset.)

Speaking of advertising, I am constrained to make a few remarks on this subject. They apply to the hotels in the Okanagan itself. Although this is the zenith of the apple harvest, and both apples and pears are at their best, yet on not a single hotel table in the valley have we met with fruit that was fit to eat, let alone fit to maintain the great reputation of that valley for these fruits. On the tables where fruit was to be had at all were mere culls, or windfalls, ill-colored, ill-flavored, and tough. A traveler who did not visit the packing houses or orchards of the district would certainly form a very poor opinion of Okanagan fruit if he judged it by the few miserable specimens which he would meet with in the Okanagan hotels. And the same thing may be said of vegetables. In a land teeming with garden products, where hundreds of acres of tomatoes are ripening in the fields, none were ever seen upon the table of the Okanagan hotels. Canned peas, string beans, and corn, in a district where these vegetables are said to mature with a peerless flavor, were regular items on the bill of fare.

COMMISSION REPORT.

establishes it to be a fact that he has a knowledge of all the important steps in the affair, then it seems to me to be illegal and unreasonable that the same circumstances should be made the ground of adverse inference or suspicion against Mr. Rutherford and Mr. Cross.

Although they exonerate Messrs. Cross and Rutherford completely, the report of Justice Harvey and Scott says that their action as trustees in making agreements in excess of what were granted to others, for similar work, and with absolutely no knowledge of the work to be done other than that offered by Clarke and his engineers, could reasonably give rise to the suspicion that they might have been actuated by some other motive than regard for the interests of the company.

It is in this connection that the report says:

"The imputation of the words of the resolution of the assembly set out in the commission is that the motive is personal interest. Many of the facts and circumstances related are consistent with such a conclusion. The suggested intimacy between Mr. Clarke and Mr. Cross, and the proceedings with the building of the road without having fulfilled the legal requirements, suggesting a relationship, warranting the belief that the Government will approve of what is done, are also consistent with this view. But the facts are consistent with other conclusions and in addition to that fact, direct testimony is given by both Dr. Rutherford and Mr. Cross explicitly denying any personal interest whatever, and it cannot be said that the evidence itself or the manner in which it was given, furnished any reason to doubt its correctness and the only ground for rejecting it would be because the circumstantial evidence is in conflict with it. As there is room for doubt that the inference of personal interest is the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the circumstances related and in view of the positive denial, it can only be said, in the opinion of your commissions, the evidence does not warrant the finding that there was or is any such personal interest on the part of Dr. Rutherford or Mr. Cross as is suggested by the words of the resolution of the assembly."

Signed D. L. SCOTT,
HARVEY HARVEY.

In Edmonton there is a general feeling of satisfaction now that the report has been made public.

Many of the supporters of the insurgent movement have been among the first to congratulate both Messrs. Rutherford and Cross. That Cushing has not come out of the ordeal with flying colors is evident, and even Bennett seems to have turned against him. At the Conservative meeting last night in the course of a long speech he placed his hand on his heart, and in a sarcastic manner called Cushing the "Only honest Liberal in the house," which caused a great deal of merriment.

Requests for interviews last night from all the parties directly concerned received the reply that "There was nothing to say." The ex-Premier, the ex-Attorney-General, and the present members of the cabinet and also the Lieutenant-Governor gave practically the same answer, but from those members who have been under fire it is given with an "I told you so" expression and pleased smiles.

All around the city yesterday there was noticed a suppressed excitement, and when the house met in the afternoon the legislative chambers were crowded. Lieutenant-Governor Bulyea read the speech from the throne, following which the new members of the cabinet were introduced by Hon. Duncan Marshall and John Woolf, M.P., for Cardston. These included Premier Sifton, Hon. Archie McLean and Hon. Charles R. Mitchell. The same members also introduced A. J. McArthur,

M.P., for Gleichen, and then E. E. Michener, member for Red Deer and newly elected leader of the Conservative party in the province introduced Mr. Patterson, member for Macleod. Michener occupied the seat formerly held by Bennett opposite premier, and the speaker notified the house of the vacancies in Vermilion, Medicine Hat, Gleichen and Macleod since the last session and also of the results of the elections in those districts, and Premier Sifton, seconded by Attorney-General Mitchell begged leave to introduce a bill respecting the administration of oaths which was read a first time; Hon. A. J. McLean laid the report of the Waterways commission on the table, and on motion of the premier the house was then adjourned until Monday next at which time the reply to the speech from the throne will be taken up. Stewart, member for Sedgewick will move the reply which will be seconded by McArthur, of Gleichen.

The CONQUEST OF CANAAN

By BOOTH TARKINGTON, Author of "Cherry," "Monks of the Cloister," Etc.

Copyright, 1905, by Harper & Brothers

"Then they reached the room where her husband was waiting for her. Cory entered first. The woman claims now that as they neared the vicinity he hastened forward at a pace which she could not equal. Naturally her testimony on all points favoring her husband is practically worthless. She followed and heard the murdered man speak, though what his words were she declares she does not know, and of course the murderer, after consultation with his lawyer, claims that the nature was threatening. Such a statement in determining the truth is more than valueless. It is known and readily proved that Peter repeatedly threatened the deceased's life yesterday, and there is no question in the mind of any man, woman or child who reads these words of the cold blooded nature of the crime. The slayer, who had formerly made a murderous attack upon his victim, lately quarreled with him and uttered threats, as we have stated, upon his life. The deed came to him with protestations of friendship and was struck down a corpse."

"It is understood that the defense will in desperation set up the theory of self defense, based on an unsubstantiated claim that Cory entered the room with a drawn pistol. No pistol was found in the room. The weapon with which the deed was accomplished was found upon the person of the murderer when he was seized by the police, one chamber discharged. Another revolver was discovered upon the person of the woman when she was arrested on the scene of the crime. This woman being strictly interrogated she said she had picked up from the floor in the confusion, thinking it was her husband's and hoping to conceal it. The chambers were full and uncharged, and we have heard it surmised that the defense means to claim that it was Cory's. Cory doubtless went on his errand of forgiveness unarmed, and beyond doubt the second weapon belonging to the woman herself, who has an unenviable record."

"The point of it all is plainly this: Here is an unquestionable murder in the first degree, and the people of this city and county are outraged and incensed that such a crime should have been committed in their law abiding and respectable community. Who was the fault? On whose head is this murder? Not with the authorities, for they do not countenance crime. Has it come to pass that, counting on jugglery of the law, criminals believe that they may kill, maim, burn and slay as they list without punishment? Is this to be another instance of the law's delinquency and immunity for a hideous crime, compounded by a cunning and cynical trickster of legal technicalities? The people of Canada cry out for a speedy trial, speedy conviction and speedy punishment of this cold blooded and murderous monster. If he is not dealt with quickly according to his deserts the climax is upon us, and the limit of Canada's patience has been reached."

"One last word, and we shall be plect to his significance noted. J. London, Esq., has been retained for the defense! The murderer before being apprehended by the authorities went straight from the scene of his crime to place his retainer in his attorney's pocket! How long is this to last? The Treen was quoted on street corners that morning in shop and store and office, wherever people talked of the Cory murder, and that was everywhere, for the people of Canada and of the country roundabout talked of nothing else. Women chattered of it in parlor and kitchen, men gathered in small groups on the street and shook their heads ominously over it; farmers, meeting on the road, halted their teams and loudly damned the little man in the Cassian jail; millmen lingered on back porches over their cans to agree with cooks that it was an awful thing and that if ever any man deserved hanging that there Peter deserved it—his lawyer along with him. They men hammered bars with fists and beer glasses, inquiring if he was no rope to be laid in the town, and Joe London, returning to his office from the little restaurant where he sometimes ate his breakfast, heard hisses following him along Main street. A clerk, a fat-shoehorned, blue aproned, pimply cheeked youth, stood in the open doors of a grocery and as he passed stared him in the face and said "Yah!" with supreme disgust. Joe stopped. "Why?" he asked mildly.

The clerk put two fingers in his mouth and whistled shrilly in derision. "You'd not be run out of town?" he exclaimed.

"I believe," said Joe, "that we have never met before."

"Go on, you hustler!" Joe looked at him gravely. "My dear sir," he returned, "you speak to me with the familiarity of an old friend."

WANT COSTS FIXED.

An application was made in the Supreme court yesterday morning by J. E. Walbridge and S. E. Bolton to have the costs adjusted in the case of Foley Locke and Larson vs. Fisher et al. The case arose out of a lease for property on Fourth street which was handed down through several parties. Fisher was sued by Foley Locke and Larson and later Nicholson and Bain costs was reserved at the time of the assignment of the lease were taken in as co-defendants. The case against Fisher was dismissed but judgment against Nicholson and Bain. The question of action and the lawyers interested want them apportioned. Mr. Bolton felt that his client should get off free but Mr. Walbridge urged that the joint action had cost more than a single action and that Fisher should pay accordingly. The question will be spoken to later.
